every corner and crevice of the gruesome murderers' cage. As the minutes hurried by Carlton waxed more and more impatient.

When his supper came he just nibbled at it, then sent it away. He paced with a long swing-ing stride up and down the cage while Deputy Sheriffs Wild and Fitzgerald, who were the last death-watch, eyed him closely.

Cariton did not fear death so much as he dreaded the shame of a public execution, and the deputy sheriffs were determined that while in their custody he should not succeed in any reckiess attempt he might make on his life. The only thing he might have done was to have dashed his brains out on the flagged flooring, but the deputy sheriffs kept close to him in his walk, and he had not the slightest chance of doing himself any bodily injury,

Then in a burst of confidence he told one of his keepers: "I heard them hammering at that thing out there to-day."
"Did it make you feel bad?" he was asked.

"No, but it set me thinking, I can tell you," he responded with a brief, mirthless laugh. The "thing" he referred to was the gallows on which Packenham and Nolan were executed

Carlton replied. The two men-one still serving his God, the other so soon to face the same God-retired to a cell which Warden Osborne has fitted up as a chapel, and there they knelt side by side for nearly an hour in prayer.
When they walked out again it was noticed that Carlton was perfectly calm and had lost all his nervorgness.

that Carton was perfectly caim and had lost all his nervoteness.

He sat down among his death-watch, with the priest, and after a while Warden Osborne and Under Sheriff Sexton dropped in.

All tried to keep up a cheerful conversation, but fatied most miscrably, until the doomed man himself took up the talk and entertained those about him with stories of his career in prison and out of it.

"How did you gain your sobriquet of Handsome Harry?" some one asked him.

"Very simply, Almost sixteen years ago I was reading in one of those boys wealiles one day a story about "Handsome Harry, the boy something or another," and a friend of mine came up and looking over my shoulder caught the title. Jokingly he said "I hereby christen you Handsome Harry Carlton, and the name stack to me ever since," he explained.

Warden Osborne had charge of Carlton in the Penitentiary where the latter was doing time for petit larceny, thirteen years ago, and they began to recall old times. Then Carlton drifted to his life in Sing Sing.

"A funny thing happened there once," he said, reflectively.

"What was it Harry 7" asked the Warden.

"A fellow escaped and he did it very neatly too. Carlton was an interesting talker, and those listening to him did not notice the flight of time until Mr. Sexton. looking at his watch, found that it was after 10 P. M.

"Well, I must leave you, Harry; good night," he said. "Well, I must leave you.

His rising was the signal for the Warden's departure also, and as he shook hands with Carlton he said. "Good-by, Harry."
"Not good-By," Warden."

"Oh, no, Warden, not good-by. Say you will run in and see me in the morning before I go, won't you?" and the condemned man looked earnestly into the kind-hearted Warden's face.

As Under-Sheriff Sexton and the Warden were crossing the court-yard the deep, hearse baying of Major, the prison's ferceious gnardian bloodhound, broke the ominous stillness, and caused many a prisoner to shudder in his boil.

It is no distinct that the does always bark at night before a death takes place, and many a one in the Temba last night believed in the omen. Carlton remarked it as a bad sign. Warden Oshorne said, though, that the dog was generally a lowed at large, and that his howing last night was due only to his being chained up, for fear of it's attacking some of those whose business made it necessary for them to cross in and about the yard.

After the departure of his visitors, Carlton again seemed to realize that his hours were rapidly lessening. He prayed again with Father Gelinas and male his last confession.

After that the father retired to sleep in a cell right near Carlton's cot in the wire caged corridor.

"HANDSOME HARRY'S" CRIME.

Brave Policeman Brennan Shot Dead After Protecting a Man from Assault. A thick damp for hung over New York in the early hours of Sunday morning, Oct. 28, 1888, Fow people were about the streets, but on the evening previous there had been a great political parade, and the salcons about town were still doing a thriving business.

Tucker's, on the corner of Thirty-third street and Third avenue, was crowded. About 4.30 o'clock the side door was pushed open with no gentle hand, and "Handsome Harry" Carlton, with two friends, swaggered in and ordered drinks. Harry's stamping ground was in that neigh-

In less time than it takes to tell it, Roessler was kicked, punched and his umbrella taken from him again.

Roessler shouted lustily for the police and Officer Bronnan again came to the rescue.

When the shugs saw him, Carlton dropped the umbrella and the trio dashed towards Third Brennan pursued them, and as last laid his hand and club on Cariton's back.

Quick as a fash the latter faced his captor and, drawing a big revolver from his pocket, exciaimed '— you, take that!'

As he spoke he fired four shots in rapid succession. One builet pierced Brennan's left temple and entered the brain.

Breunan fought manfully, but after the fourth shot he dropped dead on the street.

Carton then turned and fled, throwing his pistol away as he ran, but after a short chase he was captured by Policeman Colgan. He was taken to the East Thirty-fifth street station, licester followed him and identified him as the murderer.

OUTSIDE THE PRISON.

Carlton's Brother-in-Law Fails to Gain Admission to Him.

The scenes so familiar to those who have had to spend vigils the night before an execution in the Tombs recurred again last night.

Despite the bitter cold, men and women lingered about the Frankliu street entrance and talked of the man who was to die on the morrow about 7.30 A. M.

James McKenna, a brother-in-law of Carlton applied for admission, saying that he was working in Newark, but felt that he must see Harry once more before he was hung. He was very much under the influence of liquor, and for that reason Clerk George Roberts refused him admission. He went away oursing. In the outer office a group of reporters sat

In the outer office a group of reporters sat writing about Carlton. Warden Osborne came in and bid them good night at 11 o'clock.

"Will Atkinson, the hangman, sleep here tonight?" he was asked.

"I think he will. We expect him. His two assistants are over there," and the Warden pointed to a dark corner, where for the first time were descried twolong, lank fellows, in ill-fitting clothes and slouch hats, who seemed anxious to hide themselves.

"Will Atkinson be in to-night?" the Warden asked one of them.

"We expect him. He said he would sleep here and get in about midnight," one of them reolled in funeral tones. The hangman had not arrived at 1, 30 o'clock this morning. His two men went to bed at midnight this morning in a cell in the old prison.

The scaffold used for Carlton will be taken over to Brooklyn to day and on it Greenwall will be hung.

A TRYING ORDEAL.

The Breaking of the News-" How Quick the Time Does Fly."

It was a busy day, full of distracting incidents for the doomed man. After his last hope was shattered, when an Evenino World reporter told him positively that the Governor had re-fused to interfere, he pulled himself together by a mighty effort and evidently determined to die game. Soon after Joe Moss, of the firm of Howe & Hummel, his lawyers, called and confirmed the tidings so direful for him.

"Not very. I will cat in a minute. I was just thinking then that the sun was shining outside and I will never see it at this hour again, I can hear the tingle of the street-car bells and the hum of the busy street, but at this time to morrow my ears will be dumb to them. I could go on and tell you all I feel, but what is the use."

The deputy did not desire to hear him continue in this strain and so advised him to eat, which he did, but he only mail finished the meal. THE BISTERS OF MERCY.

At 1.30 r. M. the Sisters of Mercy arrived and brought in with them Carlton's father, wife and sister-in-law,

The meeting was intensely dramatic.
Carlton, with a smale that was aimost a sneer of drapair on his handsome face, went to the wired cage door and shoot knams with his father, then embraced and kissed his sister, and at last his wife, but she he held longer and more tenderly than the other woman.

A PATHER'S THAMS.

A PATHER'S TRABS.

The old man could not restrain his tears. He tried to but tailed. The women sobbed outright. "Huss," said Carlton. What's the use of crying, I am all right." It was no use. Rational conversation was out of the question, so as quickly as possible they were hurried out.

"Good-by, my dear, dear wife," were the last words which Carlton uttered to his wife. Sho tried to speak, but could not, and recling, sobbing, she staggered away never to see him again alive.

For the first time since his presence in the court-room there was a look of auxiety on Burglar Jimmy Hope's features when he came into Judge Wheeler's court-room this morning. It was generally expected that the Judge would hand down his decision on the habeas interest of Hays & Greenbaum's creditors, whose independent aggregate $40,000.

He returned yesterday, bringing the two either give Hepe liberty to depart for his California home or put him into the hands of the Sheriff of Cayuna County and doon him to a long imprisonment in Auburn Prison, where he owes service for breaking out of jail fourteen

When all concerned were assembled Judge Wheeler handed down his decision in these terms substantially:

"It is a settled noint of law that when a per-

What will be the next move?" was asked of Attorney Hays by an Everina World reporter this morning.

"Well, I hardly know," was the reply. "The trunks are in the Sheiid's lossession, and unless Stern & Stern effect a settlement they will be sold at anction."

"For the benefit of your clients?"

"That's a question, If any settlement is made it will probably have to be made with all the trunks were brought here.

"Do the trunks contain much jewelry, including that hafful of diamonds?" asked the reporter.

"No," laughed Mr. Hays. "there is no 'hatful of diamonds?" asked the reporter.

"No," laughed Mr. Hays. "there is no 'hatful of diamonds." only about $10,000 worth, we had expected this all along, and have always regarded the immer that there was $130,000 worth of jewelry in the trunks as extremely extradited price.

"No, the definict firm has as yet begun no negotistions toward effecting a settlement."

Mr. Macdona contouded that Hope was a dangerous character to be at large, and said that Inspector Byrnes would keep an eye on him as long as he was in the city.

Found Their Zoon Fah Goon. Chyo You Ping, the dereliet mayor of Chinatown, whose mysterious disappearance has caused his almond-eved constituents so much auxiety, has been found in an untown laundry. He was comfortably and unostentationsly hitting the pipe. He decided to resume the functions of a Zoon Fah Goom Foo Cean ising unless his adherents came after him in a sound chair. He decided the salary of #1 a day insufficient to maintain the dignity of his onicial position.

Detective police will be put on their mettle by an advertisement in a morning paper, by the authorities of the town of Athol, Mass., offering $500 reward for the arrest and enviction of the thieves who robbed the house of liency R. Stowell, of that town, of valuable papers and securities on the night of Nov. 27. Mr. Stowell adds a reward of $500 for the recovery of the papers and securities.
